

COMPREHENSION-9

The afternoon session of the school was attended by some eight or ten students, both boys and girls. Except for Apu, they had all brought mats to sit on. Apu had no mat, his mother gave an old threadbare rug. The classroom was open on all sides. There were no walls, never was there a fence outside to limit the view. Inside were the students sitting in rows, outside was the jungle. Behind the house to the west lay the orchard which the school master had inherited from his ancestors. The afternoon sun was bright and warm.
